A Global Perspective on Working with Multicultural Populations

Friday, April 16, 2010

8:30am – 3:30pm

Richardson Hall

America's 21st Century society reflects shifting and emergent cultural formations that challenge our contemporary understandings of diversity. These multicultural evolutions require us to expand our consciousness of what it means to be a diverse society in a more globally connected world; and to develop new models of practice to effectively engage populations across this more complex spectrum of diversity. This conference will engage practitioners and researchers in a unique dialogue about the ways in which leadership practices across various organizational settings intersect with and are impacted by an expanded and more complex definition of diversity.
